

What happens when 26 artists play a game of “telephone” with their art? When one artist creates a piece of art, and a second artist creates a piece of art in response to the first piece, and so on... ?

EFFECT

Since July 5, French artist Corinne Spielwey has been working in collaboration with 25 local artists to create a collection of interconnected pieces of art – in which one anchor piece of art has a gradually spreading influence on all of the others. In preparation for the opening of the exhibit, each artist was given three days to create a piece in response to the previous piece. The culmination of this cooperative effort will be featured in Ripple Effect with a variety of media represented, including dance, video, sculpture, and painting.

Inspired by the idea that it is vital for humans to be aware of our connection to each other, Spielwey's goal is to bring meaning back into human relationships through art projects that encourage direct human contact.
